LOST TWO CUSTOMERS.

Let the Clerks in the Store Laughed Then and Are Smiling Still.
"It was a rainy day," said the book-seller, "and the wet shoes and dripping umbrellas of customers had made the floor quite wet and slippery just inside the store door. All our clerks happened to be in the back part of the place when the door opened and a large and very stout lady hurried in. Just as the door swung shut behind her she slipped and fell flat upon the floor."
"Before any of us could reach her she picked herself up with surprising quickness for a woman of her size, gave a stony stare all around the room, and then, without uttering a word, turned around, opened the door and walked out in the most dignified manner."
"None of us has ever seen the woman since, and I suppose her pride will prevent her from ever coming into the store where her first appearance was so mortifying."
"It was only a day or two after that," the salesman continued, "when we lost another customer. A lady who had bought a book from us a week or so before came in and asked to exchange the volume for another one she thought she would rather have."
"I explained to her that it was our rule never to exchange books, and though I talked as politely as I could I could see she was getting angry every second. She was indignant, and didn't hesitate to say so, and she had begun to make me rather nervous when, in the midst of what was really a regular tirade, she snapped out:
"I suppose your rules are as unchangeable as the laws of the Poles and Merians—I mean the Poles and Merians—or I mean—the Merians and—"
"And then she stopped, took a long breath, made a break for the door and disappeared, and we have not yet exchanged that book,"—N. Y. Herald.
